HEALTH EDUCATORS LEARNING
TEACHING METHODS AT UM

MISSOULA--

A three-day workshop will continue through Friday (April 3) at the University of Montana to instruct health profession educators in teaching methods.

The program is sponsored by the Montana Medical Education and Research Foundation and the Mountain States Regional Medical Program under the Western Interstate Commission for Higher Education (WICHE).

Workshop directors hope to help health educators learn the importance of instructional objectives in guiding student learning, to help them gain an understanding of different instructional strategies and methods appropriate for selected instructional objectives, and to help them gain an understanding of the importance of evaluation in guiding student learning.

Faculty director of the workshop is Dr. Bruce L. Hulbert, University of Illinois College of Medicine, Chicago. Larry Halford, Missoula, is the local coordinator and Regional Medical Program consultant.

Group discussion leaders include three UM faculty members, Dr. Mitsuru J. Nakamura, professor and chairman of the microbiology department, Dr. C. LeRoy Anderson, associate professor of sociology, and Devon Chandler, UM Instructional Materials Service director and assistant professor of library.
